Eligibility/Restrictions

- We will determine what type of temporary restricted license you qualify for based on our evaluation of your driving record.
- Any restricted license issued will only be valid within the state of Washington and cannot be used to operate a commercial motor vehicle.
- We may also restrict where and when you can drive.
- Your suspension/revocation cannot be for a minor in possession, intermediate license violations, failure to pay child support, fraud, violation of court-ordered probation, medical or vision reasons, habitual traffic offender status, failure to enter into or comply with a required alcohol/drug treatment program, or vehicular assault or homicide (except under certain conditions).
- You must be a Washington licensed driver or hold a valid out-of-state driver license. The restricted license is only legal within the state of Washington.
- A second application fee is not required for a new suspension based on the same incident date.

Required documentation

- Proof of financial responsibility – the most common method is by filing a form called an SR-22. You can get one from most automobile insurance agents.
- If you are suspended for an alcohol or drug-related offense, contact an ignition interlock company that installs Washington certified devices. They will send us proof of installation.

If your employment requires you to drive a vehicle during working hours that is owned, leased, rented, or the temporary responsibility of your employer, it may be exempt. You must carry a signed Employer Declaration for Ignition Interlock Exemption (DR-500-025), available at dol.wa.gov.

If you are indigent, you may be eligible for assistance with costs of ignition interlock device installation, removal, and leasing. To apply, submit a Financial Assistance Application (DR-500-024) located at dol.wa.gov.

We must receive proof of the SR-22 insurance and any other required documentation within 30 days of receiving this application. If not, you must submit a new application and another $100 fee.

Keeping your restricted license

Your restricted driver license will be cancelled if any of the following occurs:

- You are convicted of violating the restrictions.
- Your driving privilege is suspended or revoked while your restricted license is in effect.
- We receive evidence that your reason for driving is no longer valid.
- We receive notification that your financial responsibility (SR-22) is cancelled.
- We receive notification that your ignition interlock device is no longer functioning or has been removed.
